Location: Bollaram, Secunderabad, Telangana

ABOUT RASHTRAPATHI NILAYAM:

Rashtrapati Nilayam formerly known as Residency House, is the official winter retreat of the president of India located in Hyderabad, Telangana. The president stays here for at least two weeks during their winter visit and conducts official business. It is also used as a guest house for visiting dignitaries. It is located in Bollaram in Secunderabad, a neighbourhood of Hyderabad.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE:

Originally called the Residency House, it was constructed in 1860 by Nizam Nazir-ud-Dowla. It became the country house of the British Resident at Secunderabad. After the Hyderabad state's integration into Indian Union (Read Operation Polo) in 1948, it became the president's retreat and used as the Southern Sojourn. The decision to open the estate to the general public marked a significant step in making India's presidential history more accessible and engaging for a wider audience.

PURPOSE OF VISIT:

Rashtrapati Nilayam is more than a tourist destination; it's an enriching experience that bridges generations, inviting one and all to partake in its legacy of unity, learning, and beauty. This historic site, now open to the general public, has transformed into an inviting beacon for families, history enthusiasts, and tourists seeking a unique glimpse into India's regal past and the vibrant present. Whether you're a family looking for an educational outing or a history aficionado eager to delve into the stories of India's past, Rashtrapati Nilayam offers an unparalleled journey into the heart of Indian tradition and elegance.

OUTCOME OF VISIT TO RASHTRAPATI NILAYAM:

The visit provided an excellent opportunity to visit a site of great historical significance, enhancing their knowledge and understanding the cultural history of India. This experience fostered a deeper appreciation for India's rich heritage and culture.
